

Are you interested in a custom-designed Masters Degree?
If so, please consider Clemson University's new

MEd in Teaching and Learning

In an effort to respond to the professional needs of educators today, we have designed our new MEd program to be as flexible as possible and customizable to your interests and needs. Programs can be cross-discipline, across a range of grade levels, and will emphasize subject matter that will directly address challenges facing your schools. Establishing a district cohort not only provides students with a reduced tuition rate but also affords students opportunities to learn within a social context, an essential ingredient to a meaningful and worthwhile educational experience. The 30-hour program consists of 6 required CORE courses and 4 elective Specialty courses. Along the way to earning an MEd, students may also accumulate the necessary coursework to add on certification in ESOL, Early Childhood, Middle Level, or Secondary Education.

6 Required CORE Courses (all courses can be taught online)

- Cultural Diversity
- Educational Tests and Measures
- Classroom Research
- Advanced Educational Psychology
- Educational Research Methods
- Curriculum Theory

4 Elective Specialty Courses Could Include:

- Digital Media for Teachers
- Serious Games for the Classroom
- Principles and Strategies for Teaching English Speakers of Other Languages
- Upstate Writing Project Courses
- Common Core Implementation
- South Carolina History
- Socio-Cultural Contexts of Learning
- Perspectives on Poverty and Schooling
- Fostering Creativity in a Standards-Based Classroom
- Critical Readings in Contemporary Educational Policy
- K-12 Classroom Discourse
- Equity and Groupwork in the K-12 Classroom
- Transforming the Classroom with Project-Based Instruction

For More Information, Contact:
Rebecca F. Kaminski, EdD
krebecc@clemson.edu
Coordinator, MEd in Teaching and Learning and Add-On Certification Programs
864-250-6723