Brittany Maynard "why I'm choosing to die on my own"

29 year old, Brittany Maynard is known for living a fearless lifestyle, running marathons, traveling, and even climbing Mount Kilimanjaro. Back in April she was told that she only has six weeks to live because she is suffering with brain cancer (Tumor). Maynard intends to end her own life with medication prescribed by her doctor, and she wants to make it clear that it's not suicide. In her interview she tells them that she wants to live and she wishes there was a cure, but there's not. When she recently went back to the hospital they discovered that her tumor has grown even larger, so Maynard and her family decided to move to Portland so that she could have access to Oregon's Death with Dignity Act. She wants to be here to celebrate her husband's birthday (October 30) and she is expected to pass on Nov 1 (that's the date she chose) because she is getting sicker, and dealing with more pain and seizures.

Ebola update

The *Texas patient's health has taken a turn for the worse since last week. It has been said that ZMapp is not being used to treat patient, Thomas Eric Duncan. Supplies for this drug have run out, officials say. This drug contains three antibodies to the Ebola Virus. It was previously used to treat the first two US health care workers who became sick with Ebola while working in West Africa, but who are now recovered. It is still unclear whether the drug works to treat Ebola infections. A homeless man may have had contact with Duncan. The authorities finally caught this man yesterday and he's shown no symptoms of Ebola and is considered as a low-risk individual. Nonetheless this man is among 50 others that these officials want to monitor daily. Since people have learned of this Texas case calls and emails have drastically increased about questions of Ebola. This ongoing outbreak has sickened thousands and since early 2014 more than 3,300 have died. The Texas patient developed symptoms four days after arriving to Texas from Liberia. At this time he is still in isolation at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital. As well an NBC News cameraman who was covering this outbreak recently became sick with Ebola and is now the fifth American infected with Ebola. He's been set to return to the U.S. for treatment but as of yesterday October 8, 2014, Mr. Duncan has passed away from this deadly virus.

*as of Oct.8th, after this article was written, the patient has passed away from the virus.

Canada

The Public Health Agency of Canada deployed a second mobile laboratory and two additional Agency scientists to Sierra Leone to join the Agency's existing team in the field in Kailahun. One mobile lab team will continue to provide rapid diagnostic support to help local healthcare workers to quickly diagnose Ebola. The second mobile lab team will work with Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) to monitor the effectiveness of infection prevention procedures such as hand washing stations, face masks and disposal sites to prevent the further spread of Ebola.

ISIS

ISIS militants in Syria raised a black flag over a building in eastern Kobani on Monday, the closest they have come to seizing control of the town which is only six miles from the Turkish border. The flag, apparently belonging to the extremist Islamist group, was visible atop a four-story building close to the scene of some of the most intense clashes in recent days. ISIS jihadi fighters have been using bullets manufactured in the United States during the militant group's bloody campaign across Iraq and Syria. Most of the U.S. ammo was manufactured in the first decade of the 21st century, when Washington was bolstering Iraqi forces following the fall of Saddam Hussein.

CLASSIC CAR OF THE WEEK

by Adrien Cruz-Rimirez

Inspired by the success of the Ford Mustang, Chevrolet launched its own pony car, and the Camaro. Chevrolet stated that the "Camaro" was named after the French word for "comrade," although some linguists argued that it was actually Spanish for a type of shrimp. Not exactly an awe inspiring name for a new pony car. Luckily, the Camaro had the muscle to back up its case. The Camaro was based on the upcoming 1968 Chevy Nova platform, and featured a unibody structure from the windshield and firewall back, with a separate steel rail sub frame for everything up front. Included as standard equipment a modified 350 cid V8 (the first 350 engine Chevy ever offered) with an available 396 cid big block producing 325bhp (L35) and later a 375bhp version, along with simulated air-intakes on the hood, special bumble bee striping, and a blacked out grill. It was possible to order both the RS and SS packages, and get a RS/SS Camaro, in which case the RS badging took precedence. Camaro popularity soared when a RS/SS Convertible with the 396 paced the 1967 Indianapolis 500 race.
